

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

On March 16, 2024, Spanish police arrested an alleged ISIS supporter in Barcelona. The suspect, an 18-year-old Spanish national of Moroccan heritage, reportedly disseminated “jihadist content on terrorist activities” as well as “material suitable for the manufacture of explosives” through instant messaging applications. Authorities further accused him of instructing four members of a jihadist cell in Tyresö, Sweden, that was reportedly preparing an attack. He also reportedly had connections with a jihadist in Canada who was arrested in December 2023. The Spanish Civil Guard also alleged that the suspect is connected to terrorist financing activities as he used cryptocurrencies that will be further investigated. According to the European Jewish Congress, an increase in antisemitism has also been recorded in Spain following the onset of the Israel-Hamas war in October 2023. On March 6, 2024, Spanish national police arrested a man accused of encouraging others to “take up arms” against the Jewish community in Melilla. The suspect, an ISIS and Hamas supporter, both incited and participated in an October 2023 assault against a synagogue in Melilla where hundreds of pro-Palestine demonstrators rioted in front of the synagogue shouting “murderous Israel” until police dispersed the crowd. (Sources: El País, Euro Weekly News, European Jewish Congress, Algemeiner, European Jewish Congress)

The fate of Spanish national foreign fighters who joined ISIS present a series of challenges to Spain’s judicial system. On January 11, 2024, two Spanish women, Yolanda Martínez Cobos and Luna Fernández Grande, appeared before the National Court in Madrid on charges of membership in a terror organization. The women were repatriated from a refugee camp in northeastern Syria in January 2023. According to court documents, the judge believed there was enough evidence to suggest the women willingly traveled to ISIS-held territory in 2014 with the intent of providing material support to the terrorist group. (Sources: Guardian, El País, El Mundo, El Confidencial)

In recent years, Spain has contended with numerous planned terror attacks from homegrown terror cells. On November 21, 2023, three suspects, including two Spanish men and one British woman, were arrested in the southern cities of Lanjaron and Fuengirola in connection to the shooting of far-right politician Alejo Vidal-Quadras. Vidal-Quadras, the founder of the Vox party and the former vice president of the European parliament, suffered a non-fatal shot in the face by two assailants on a motorcycle in Madrid on November 9. Vidal-Quadras suggested the shooting could be linked to his opposition of the Iranian regime and his placement on Iran’s terrorist blacklist. One of the male suspects is reportedly a “radical Shia Muslim” and had hired a paid assassin to target Vidal-Quadras. (Sources: El Economista, El Mundo, Guardian, Daily Mail, Al Jazeera)

Spain remains steadfast in its efforts to monitor, capture, and disband potential terrorist cells operating within the country. On November 9, 2023, Spanish police arrested 14 Pakistani nationals in Catalonia, Valencia, Guipuzcoa, Vitoria, Logrono, and Lleida, on suspicion of membership in a terror cell linked to Tehreek-e-Labbaik Pakistan (TLP), a Pakistani Islamist political party, and disseminated jihadist and radicalization messages online. A couple of weeks earlier on October 21, Spanish police arrested four individuals in Madrid, Cubelles, and Huetor-Tajar on suspicion of crimes including the glorification of terrorism. One of the suspects downloaded a bomb-making manual, while another had “taken the first steps” to replicate bombs used during the August 2017 Barcelona attacks. (Sources: Times of India, Arab News)

Overview

Since the early 1960s, the Basque nationalist and separatist group Euskadi Ta Askatasuna (ETA) has killed more than 829 people in its effort to gain independence from Spain. The group was designated as a terrorist organization by Spain, the United States, Britain, France, and the European Union. ETA declared a “definitive end” to armed activity in October 2011 and announced that it was officially dissolving in a letter dated April 16, 2018. On May 20, 2022, the U.S. Department of State revoked its designation of ETA as a Foreign Terrorist Organization (FTO). According to the State Department, the group was “no longer engaged in terrorism or terrorist activity” and no longer has the “capability and intent to do so.” Sources: Human Rights Watch, France 24, Guardian, U.S. Department of State)

Spain has also been a target for Islamic extremists. Up until the late 15th century, large parts of Spain and Portugal were under the control of an Islamic caliphate. Consequently, ISIS, al-Qaeda, and other Islamist groups have vowed to “re-conquer” what they refer to as “al-Andalus,” the historic Arabic name for the Iberian mainland. In 2014, a Spanish-speaking ISIS member declared: “I tell you, Spain is the land of our forefathers, and, Allah willing, we are going to liberate it, with the might of Allah....” Moreover, in the year leading up to the 2017 attacks in Barcelona and Cambrils, Spain was reportedly mentioned 45 times in ISIS propaganda. (Sources: ABC News, El País, MEMRI, Time)

Spain suffered “the worst Islamist attack in European history” on March 11, 2004, when blasts from 10 bombs killed 191 people on four Madrid-bound commuter trains. In the decade following the attack, Spain reportedly arrested 472 suspected Islamist militants. By 2014, approximately 1,800 security officials were dedicated to fighting terrorism in the country. In the wake of the January 2015 Charlie Hebdo attack in Paris, France, Spain raised its terror threat level to a four (in a five-tiered system). Between June 2015 and December 2016, Spain arrested 177 suspected terrorists.

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

(Sources: Guardian, CNN, U.S. Department of State, El País, Euro Weekly)

In June 2017, El País reported that the Spanish government had more than 3,000 individuals working to prevent terror attacks in Spain. Among those working to prevent terrorism were the Spanish police, who were reportedly monitoring 259 individuals and tapping 500 telephones. Despite these measures, in August 2017 Spain suffered two vehicular-ramming attacks that claimed a total of 14 lives and injured more than 100 others. (Sources: El País, Reuters)

Spain recognizes the importance of international cooperation and information sharing in preventing terrorism and is currently a member of the Global Counterterrorism Forum, the Council of Europe, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. Spanish police have also worked closely with security forces in Morocco, Germany, and other countries to dismantle transnational jihadist networks. (Source: U.S. Department of State)

Radicalization and Foreign Fighters

Radicalization

The Spanish government's 2019 counterterrorism strategy concluded that "the activity of lone actors and cells radicalized by themselves in Spanish territory" present the greatest threat to Spain. The 2004 Madrid train bombings and the 2017 attacks in Barcelona and Cambrils were orchestrated primarily by Moroccan nationals that had been radicalized while living in Spain. Of the 21 Moroccans implicated in the devastating 11-M attacks, 19 had reportedly been radicalized in Spain. Similarly, eight of the 10 individuals involved in the 2017 Barcelona and Cambrils attacks were Moroccan nationals that had been radicalized in Spain by Abdelbaki Essati, a local imam from the city of Ripoll. Analysts believe that Essati, who died in an explosion on the day before the vehicular attack in Barcelona, communicated with members of ISIS's external operations wing. (Sources: El País, Combating Terrorism Center, BBC News, Combating Terrorism Center, Combating Terrorism Center, New York Times)

Of those arrested in Spain between 2013 and 2016 for Islamist-terror related activities, 42 percent were Spaniards and 43 percent were Moroccans, according to an empirical study published by West Point's Combating Terrorism Center. The study found that 90 percent of the detainees had been partially or entirely radicalized while living in Spain. (Source: Combating Terrorism Center)

As of February 2019, 139 individuals were imprisoned in Spain on terrorism-related charges. The government has identified 120 inmates in Spanish prisons—all imprisoned on non-terrorism-related charges—at risk of radicalization. Spanish authorities have also identified 49 inmates imprisoned on petty crime charges who have been radicalized and work to recruit others in prison. A reported 81 prisoners show signs of increasing radicalization. Since 2018, Spanish authorities have broken up at least two extremist recruitment networks inside Spanish prisons. According to authorities, these networks sought to radicalize Muslims imprisoned for non-extremist crimes. A February 2019 prison raid identified a recruitment ring offering €500,000 to €1 million to any prisoner willing to commit suicide attacks after their release from prison. The money reportedly came from international drug trafficking. (Sources: El País, Government of Spain, El País)

Like other European countries, Spain has seen a rise in online radicalization. "Islam en Español," a Facebook page that glorified ISIS and promoted militancy, had approximately 32,500 followers in September 2016. Following the 2017 attacks in Barcelona and Cambrils, ISIS reportedly released its first propaganda video in Spanish. In the video, a man identified as Abu Lais Al Qurdubi from Cordoba, encouraged Muslim viewers to "carry out jihad where you are" and said that "Allah willing, Al Andalus will become again what is was, part of the caliphate." (Sources: Reuters, Deutsche Welle, USA Today)

Islamic extremists have targeted women, in particular, in online recruitment. In December 2014, Spanish and Moroccan police arrested seven individuals that had reportedly recruited 12 women online to travel to ISIS-held territory to join the terrorist organization. Following ISIS's Paris attacks on November 13, 2015, ringleader Abdelhamid Abaaoud, reportedly "tried to recruit Spaniards, especially women, through social networks to join and fight with Daesh... to repopulate the caliphate." (Sources: Reuters, International Business Times)

In recent years, Spanish cities in North Africa such as Melilla and Ceuta have increasingly become a locus for recruitment. In August 2014, Spanish and Moroccan police broke up a nine-person cell that was radicalizing and sending new recruits from Ceuta and neighboring cities in Morocco to ISIS-held territory in Iraq and Syria. A month later, another ISIS recruitment network was dismantled in Melilla and Nador, a city in Morocco. On May 20, 2014, Spanish authorities broke up a Melilla-based cell reportedly responsible for radicalizing and sending 26 individuals to fight with al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM). According to an NPR article published in 2015, several female ISIS recruiters have been arrested in Ceuta

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

for targeting Spanish women online. (Sources: Business Insider, Al Arabiya, New York Post, CNN, El Mundo, NPR)

According to an Arab Weekly report in October 2017, Catalan authorities have noticed an increased Muslim Brotherhood presence in the region. The Brotherhood in Catalonia have reportedly been trying to organize forums, build schools, and provide social services in an attempt to gain legitimacy in the region, sparking concerns about a greater spread of extremist ideology. (Source: Arab Weekly)

Far-Right Extremism

In its 2019 counterterrorism strategy, the Spanish government recognized the rise of identity-based extremism, based on the promotion of a superior ethno-nationalist identity. The Interior Ministry labeled the ideology “one of the most worrying issues today” because it could cause “violent dynamics and support for terrorism among minority sectors of our society.” One such group in Spain is Generación Identitaria, a branch of the transnational identitarian group Generation Identity (GI). GI believes it is defending European culture from the so-called Great Replacement, which GI describes as “the process by which the indigenous European population is replaced by non-European migrants.” Though Generation Identity is officially non-violent, the ideology has spurred followers to physically defend against the alleged invasion. The March 2019 New Zealand attacker, who killed 50 people in two mosques, subscribed to the Great Replacement theory and believed that the European character of New Zealand was under attack. Generación Identitaria has attracted hundreds of followers on social media. The group further attracts followers through demonstrations and protests. GI targets youth by casting migrants as responsible for the economic and social problems of indigenous Europeans. (Sources: El Pais, Generación Identitaria, Generation Identity United Kingdom and Ireland, Facebook, Twitter, Vox, Internet Archive)

Spain continues to tackle far-right sentiment. On December 10, 2020, Spanish police arrested two men in Andalusia and Pamplona. The suspects allegedly sold drugs to buy weapons to plan a future race war. After a year-long investigation, Spanish authorities discovered messages online in which the suspects praised Brenton Tarrant—an Australian white supremacist, who shot dead 51 Muslims in Christchurch, New Zealand, in March 2019—and expressed the intention to buy weapons and create “isolated white supremacist groups.” The men appeared in court in Catalonia on December 13, where they faced charges of race hate crimes, possession of arms and explosives, support for racist terrorism, and offenses against public health. Both suspects were released on bail. (Source: Reuters)

In 2021, far-right activities remain a threat. On February 4, the Cartagena headquarters of Spain’s Podemos party was attacked, with unknown assailants firebombing the building. No one was injured in the attack. Podemos, the anti-austerity and pro-democracy movement, claimed the incident was “Fascist terrorism” as the offices were previously graffitied with the word “Redes” (“reds”). (Source: Euronews)

ETA and Basque Separatism

The Basque Country is a geographic area in the western Pyrenees Mountains between Spain and France. The area is home to the Basque people, who have largely maintained autonomy in Spain-held Basque territory. Violent Basque separatist group Euskadi Ta Azkatasuna (“Basque Homeland and Freedom” or ETA) caused hundreds of deaths in the latter half of the 20th century. In 1937, Spanish dictator General Francisco Franco occupied Spain’s previously autonomous Basque country. In the 1960s, Franco banned the Basque language and imprisoned and tortured Basque leaders. ETA emerged as a student protest movement against Franco in 1959 to protest for the creation of an independent Basque homeland. In the group’s first act of violence, it tried to derail a train carrying Spanish politicians in 1961. In its first fatal attack, ETA killed Meliton Manzananas, the police chief in the Basque city of San Sebastian, in 1968. In December 1973, the group assassinated Spanish Prime Minister Admiral Luis Carrero Blanco. In 1995, ETA almost assassinated opposition leader Jose Maria Aznar, who would become Spain’s prime minister in 1996. (Sources: BBC News, BBC News, Reuters, Reuters)

ETA formed its political wing, Herri Batasuna, in 1978. Spain permanently banned Herri Batasuna in 2003. Prior to the ban, the party reportedly represented 15 percent of Basque people in local and regional government organizations. The United States and European Union designated the party a terrorist organization shortly after. In October 2007, Spanish police arrested almost the entire Batasuna leadership on charges of glorifying terrorism. (Sources: BBC News, BBC News, Independent)

From its emergence in 1968, ETA had set off dozens of bombs targeting civilians, police, and tourists in Spain and France, killing more than 820 people. In the 1970s, the group reportedly killed an average of 100 people per year. In 1980, considered ETA’s deadliest year, the group killed 118 people. The group announced multiple ceasefires in the 1990s and early 2000s, but it continued to violate the declarations. In October 2011, ETA declared a ceasefire and announced the end of its violent campaign. In April 2017, the group revealed the locations of its weapons caches and claimed to unilaterally disarm. In April 2018, ETA published an apology in two Basque newspapers for the deaths of victims without “a direct participation in the conflict.” ETA also announced that month it was completely disbanding. The following month it released an audio statement to the BBC that it had “completely dismantled” and ceased all political activity. (Sources: BBC News, BBC News, BBC News, Agence France-Presse)

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

On May 20, 2022, the U.S. Department of State revoked its designation of ETA as a Foreign Terrorist Organization (FTO). According to the State Department, the group was “no longer engaged in terrorism or terrorist activity” and no longer had the “capability and intent to do so.” (Sources: France 24, U.S. Department of State)

Antisemitism

The European Jewish Congress noted an increase in antisemitism in Spain following the onset of the Israel-Hamas war in October 2023. On October 18, 2023, hundreds of pro-Palestinian demonstrators rioted in front of the Or Zaruah Yamin Benarroch synagogue in Melilla, shouting “murderous Israel” until police dispersed the crowd. On October 21, a group of protesters occupied the lobby of an Israeli-owned hotel in Barcelona. On March 6, 2024, Spanish national police arrested a man accused of encouraging others to “take up arms” against the Jewish community in Melilla. The suspect both incited and participated in the October 2023 Melilla assault. The suspect, who has been investigated since November, has reportedly endorsed ISIS across his social media channels and has supported violent acts undertaken by the terror group Hamas. (Sources: Euro Weekly News, European Jewish Congress, Algemeiner, European Jewish Congress)

Antisemitic attitudes have been noted in various sectors of Spain’s society and culture. In 2020, over 20 Jewish groups from the United States and Spanish-speaking countries called on Spain to drop two antisemitic definitions from the country’s official dictionary produced by the Real Academia Espanola (RAE). The entry for the word “Jew” alluded to terms with antisemitic intent. According to the RAE, “Judiada” not only refers to “a crowd or group of Jews,” but also a “dirty trick or an action that is detrimental to someone.” The RAE confirmed it would process the request to revise the entry following criticism of its publication. Further, a 2023 audit by the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) concluded that about 26 percent of Spain’s adult population harbors antisemitic attitudes. The ADL estimated that 10,215,079 of Spain’s overall adult population of 39,288,764 harbor antisemitic attitudes. In compiling the figure, ADL researchers asked a sample of 510 Spaniards a series of questions informed by Jewish stereotypes and to what degree those surveyed agreed to the statements. Among the statements:

- 56 percent responded “probably true” to the statement “Jews are more loyal to Israel than to Spain.”
- 45 percent responded “probably true” to the statement “Jews have too much power in the business world.”
- 40 percent responded “probably true” to the statement “Jews still talk too much about what happened to them in the Holocaust.”
- 29 percent responded “probably true” to the statement “Jews don’t care what happens to anyone but their own kind.”
- 28 percent responded “probably true” to the statement “Jews have too much control over global affairs.”

(Sources: Times of Israel, Anti-Defamation League)

Foreign Fighters

As of March 2019, the Spanish government believed that 237 Spanish citizens or residents had traveled abroad to become foreign fighters. The foreign fighters primarily traveled to the Middle East, but some also went to Mali and the Philippines. Of the 237, the government believed that 130 remained abroad and 61 were dead. Of the 21 who have returned to Spain, 12 have been jailed. Another 24 have traveled to other European countries, where eight have been imprisoned. The government reportedly lost track of one individual. Approximately 80 percent of Spain’s foreign fighter contingent is made up of foreign nationals, mostly Moroccans living in Spain. (Source: El Pais)

In November 2015, the Spanish National Police and INTERPOL’s National Central Bureau in Madrid co-hosted a meeting during which countries discussed the importance of information sharing to contain the threat posed by foreign fighters. Spain’s then-Interior Minister Jorge Fernández Díaz expressed concern that returnees may perpetrate violent acts or facilitate recruitment within Spain and has highlighted the importance of international cooperation. (Sources: The Soufan Group, INTERPOL, CNN)

Although ISIS was territorially defeated in 2019, the Spanish government did not begin repatriating Spanish nationals detained at refugee camps in northern Syria until 2023. The first group of women and children returnees were repatriated on January 11, 2023. Among the returnees were two women and 13 children. Upon their arrival to the Torrejón de Ardoz military airbase near Madrid, the women are taken into custody by the National Police and the children were put into the care of social services. As of January 2024, the two women, Yolanda Martínez Cobos and Luna Fernández Grande, were on trial on charges of membership in a terror organization. According to court documents, the judge overseeing the case believed there was enough evidence to suggest the women willingly traveled to ISIS-held territory with the intent of providing material support to the terrorist group, which the families deny. (Sources: Guardian, El Pais, El Mundo, El Confidencial)

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

Major Extremist and Terrorist Incidents

2017 Attacks in Barcelona and Cambrils

On August 17, 2017, a van crashed into a crowd of people on the Las Ramblas pedestrian walkway in Barcelona, killing 13 and wounding more than 100 others. Police arrested two suspects in the immediate aftermath of the attack, but the van's driver fled the scene on foot. After escaping the scene, the driver stabbed another individual to death in a car hijacking. ISIS released a statement through its Amaq News Agency referring to the perpetrators as "Islamic State soldiers." ISIS claimed that the attackers "carried out the operation in response to calls for targeting coalition states." Mariano Rajoy, the Spanish Prime Minister at the time, called the killings a "savage terrorist attack."

Early the following morning, five men attempted another vehicular-ramming attack in Cambrils, a coastal town located south of Barcelona. After overturning their car, the men were shot and killed by the Spanish police. Six civilians and a police officer were wounded in the attack and one woman was killed. The suspects were reportedly wearing explosive belts, which police later determined to be fake. Police identified the five as 17-year-old Moussa Oukabir, 19-year-old El Houssaine Abouyaaqoub, 19-year-old Said Aallaa, 21-year-old Omar Hychami, and 24-year-old Mohamed Hychami. All five were born in Morocco. The following day, ISIS issued an official statement claiming responsibility for the attack in Cambrils. Police believe that the Barcelona and Cambrils attacks were related and that the perpetrators belonged to the same cell. (Sources: BBC News, BBC News, New York Times, Associated Press, New York Times, Guardian, Guardian, Reuters, Independent)

On August 16, a house linked to the cell exploded in the coastal town of Alcanar Platja. Authorities believe that the explosion occurred while members of the cell were attempting to build a bomb. Inside the house, Catalan firefighters discovered 120 canisters of butane and propane. Police later found trace amounts of TATP, a popular explosive featured in a notorious ISIS bomb-making video. The initial explosion killed two individuals. A second explosion wounded first responders on the scene. One of the two people killed in the explosion was Abdelbaki Essati, a Moroccan imam living in the Spanish town of Ripoll. Essati is believed to have radicalized the cell and to have masterminded the attacks. (Sources: Independent, Reuters, Guardian, Sky News, New York Times, New York Times)

The cell had allegedly planned a bombing campaign through Barcelona before the premature explosion, according to Spanish authorities. Without the explosives, the cell instead turned to using their vehicles in ramming attacks. In the hours succeeding the Las Ramblas attack, police arrested four suspected members of the cell. By the following Monday, police reported that the cell had been completely dismantled. (Sources: Guardian, Independent, Guardian, Reuters)

After a five-day search, police shot and killed the driver of the August 17 attack, who was wearing what appeared to be a suicide belt. Police later identified the driver as a 22-year-old Moroccan immigrant named Younes Abouyaaquoub, who lived in Ripoll. Abouyaaquoub's credit card was reportedly used the day of the attack to rent three vans, including the one used in the Las Ramblas attack. (Sources: Reuters, Associated Press, Guardian, Independent, Guardian, Reuters)

Altogether, 130 people were wounded in the Las Ramblas and Cambrils attacks. These attacks were Spain's deadliest since the 2004 Madrid bombings, which killed 192 on commuter trains. It was also Spain's first fatal attack since July 2009, when Basque separatist group ETA killed two paramilitary officers on the Spanish island of Majorca. (Sources: Guardian, Guardian, Reuters, Associated Press, Associated Press, BBC News, New York Times)

On May 27, 2021, Spain's highest criminal court, the Audencia Nacional, sentenced three men—Mohamed Houli Chemlal, Driss Oukabir, and Ben Iazza—for assisting the perpetrators of the August 2017 terror attacks. Chemlal was sentenced to 53 and a half years imprisonment, while Oukabir was sentenced to 46 years imprisonment for belonging to a terrorist organization, possessing explosives, terrorist destruction, and causing serious injury. Iazza was acquitted of belonging to a terrorist organization, but was sentenced to eight years imprisonment for collaborating with a terrorist group through lending identity documents and a van that "he knew would be used to buy and transport chemical products." (Source: Guardian)

2004 Madrid Train Bombings ("11-M" Attacks)

On the morning of March 11, 2004, Islamist terrorists murdered 191 people and injured approximately 1,800 in Madrid. The terrorists used cellphones to detonate 10 bombs that exploded on four commuter trains at three different stations. The chief perpetrators of the 11-M massacre were young men, primarily of North African origin. They were reportedly inspired by an al-Qaeda-affiliated website that called for attacks on the Spanish mainland leading up to Spain's March 14th general election.

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

Both the conservative People's Party (PP) incumbent, Jose Maria Aznar, and the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party (PSOE) candidate, Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero, politicized the event. Aznar immediately pointed the finger at ETA, despite evidence showing that jihadists were responsible. (Sources: Guardian, Deutsche Welle)

On April 3, 2004, seven suspected perpetrators of 11-M committed suicide by detonating explosives strapped to themselves. Officers of Spain's Grupo Especial Operaciones (GEO) force tracked the men to an apartment in Madrid. The suicide explosion killed one GEO officer and wounded 15 other agents. (Sources: Telegraph, El País, BBC News, CNN)

By October 2007, 29 individuals were indicted for the Madrid train bombings. Their charges included murder, belonging to a terrorist cell, and providing material support for the bombings. Three of the individuals were sentenced to over a thousand years in prison but will only serve 40 (the maximum sentence that can be served under Spanish law). (Sources: Reuters, Guardian)

- July 23, 2024: Madrid's Audencia Nacional sentences Pompeyo Gozalez Pascual to 18 years' imprisonment on charges of terrorism and manufacturing explosives.
In 2022, Pascual sent homemade letter bombs to Spain's then-Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez, U.S. and Ukrainian embassies, and a Spanish arms firm that manufactured and donated arms to Ukraine. A Ukrainian embassy staffer was lightly injured after opening one of the letter bombs. According to authorities, Pascual sought to end Spain's support for Ukraine in the Russia-Ukraine conflict. Source: Agence France-Presse
- July 18, 2024: In a joint operation, Spanish and German authorities arrest four individuals suspected of belonging to a network that supplied Hezbollah with parts to manufacture kamikaze drones.
Three of the suspects are arrested following raids in Barcelona and Badalona, while another is detained in Germany. The weapons were intended to be used in attacks in northern Israel. According to authorities, the network was reportedly one of Hezbollah's primary suppliers. Sources: Associated Press, Telegraph
- July 2, 2024: Spanish and Moroccan security forces arrest a group of eight suspected ISIS supporters in a series of raids in Madrid, Malaga, and Melilla.
The suspects are accused of distributing propaganda and attempting to recruit ISIS fighters via private messaging platforms. Source: Morocco World News
- June 18, 2024: Spanish authorities, in cooperation with the FBI and Europol, arrest nine people across four cities in connection to extremist messages calling for violence during the Paris Olympics.
The messages were distributed across a media network that was linked to ISIS and hosted on servers across Germany, the Netherlands, Iceland, and the U.S. Authorities subsequently took down the servers which distributed languages in at least 30 languages. Source: Euro News
- June 6, 2024: Spanish National police along with Morocco's General Directorate of Territorial Surveillance, arrests a man in Alicante, on suspicion of being a member of ISIS.
The man reportedly published his own jihadist materials, which he used to recruit, indoctrinate, and glorify terrorism. Source: Morocco World News
- April 10, 2024: Spanish police arrest a Belgian national of Moroccan origin following a surprise raid at Méndez Álvaro Sur bus station in Madrid.
The suspect—who is linked to drug trafficking and has warrants for his arrest due to non-terror crimes in Belgium—is found hiding an assault rifle, multiple rounds of ammunition, a pistol, three cartridges, and three bulletproof vests. The suspect attempted to travel to France where he is suspected of plotting to target the Paris Saint-Germain and FC Barcelona soccer game in Paris. The arrest comes two days after ISIS distributed a video of armed militants threatening to target the European Cup, particularly games held at Emirates Stadium, Parc des Princes, Metropolitan, and Santiago Bernabeu. Source: Atalayar
- March 27, 2024: A Pakistani national carrying an axe attacks a McDonald's restaurant in Catalunya in response to U.S. support for Israel in the Hamas war.
The suspect smashes several windows before he is stopped by an off-duty policeman and a security guard. The suspect tells police he "saw a video where they were killing Palestinian children and that's why I attacked the McDonald's, because it is North American." Upon investigation of his apartment, police also discover jihadist material. Source: Olive Press
- March 16, 2024: Spanish police arrest an alleged ISIS supporter in Barcelona.
The suspect, an 18-year-old Spanish national of Moroccan heritage, is accused of disseminating "jihadist content on terrorist activities" as well as "material suitable for the manufacture of explosives" through instant messaging applications. The suspect managed to use "tools that let him operate anonymously" online. He is further accused of instructing four members of a jihadist cell in Tyresö, Sweden who were allegedly preparing an attack. The Swedish Security Service (SÄPO) reportedly alerted the Information Service of the Civil Guard of the cell a year prior. The Spanish Civil Guard believes the suspect is also connected to terrorist financing activities as he used cryptocurrencies that will be further investigated. His terror connections also include a jihadist in Canada who was arrested in December 2023 as well as links to ISIS members in Asia and Europe. Sources: El País, Agence France-Presse
- March 6, 2024: Spanish national police arrest a man accused of encouraging others to "take up arms" against the Jewish community in Melilla.

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

The suspect both incited and participated in the October 2023 assault on Melilla's central synagogue, Or Zaruah Yamin Benarroch. The suspect, who has been investigated since November, has reportedly endorsed ISIS across his social media channels and has supported violent acts undertaken by the terror group Hamas. In the October 2023 attack, hundreds of pro-Palestine demonstrators rioted in front of the synagogue shouting "murderous Israel" until police dispersed the crowd. Sources: Euro Weekly News, European Jewish Congress, Algemeiner

- February 29, 2024: Spain's Supreme Court opens an investigation into former Catalonia President and separatist chief Carles Puigdemont for his connection to protests following the Catalan region's failed 2017 independence referendum. Puigdemont is under investigation for "crimes of terrorism in relation to the facts investigated in the 'Democratic Tsumani' case." Democratic Tsumani, a Catalan nationalist group, reportedly launched multiple protests in 2019. One demonstration saw thousands of protesters block access to Barcelona's airport, leading to clashes with police and the cancellation of more than 100 flights. Source: Politico
- February 12, 2024: Spain's Audiencia Nacional criminal court sentences both Karim Abdesalem Mohamed and Mohamed El Gharbi to seven-and-a-half years' imprisonment for "recruitment and terrorist indoctrination." According to the court, the two suspects—both of whom were already serving eight- to 12-year sentences for belonging to terror cells—reportedly encouraged other inmates to follow the jihadist ideology of ISIS and continue terrorist activities once released. Source: Agence France-Presse
- January 21, 2024: The National Police arrest a Syrian national on suspicion of jihadist-related activities in Montellano, Seville. The 17-year-old suspect was reported by his mother after she discovered text messages on his phone suggesting he was planning an attack. Source: El Mundo
- December 20, 2023: The Moroccan Central Bureau of Judicial Investigations (BCIJ) and Spanish authorities launch a joint counterterrorism operation in Nador, Morocco, and Melilla, Spain. One suspect is detained in Nador. An unidentified number of suspects are arrested in Melilla, including a former detainee who joined terror organizations in the Sahel. The suspects allegedly attempted to recruit others to carry out terror operations. Source: Arab Weekly
- December 16, 2023: In a joint two-year operation carried out by Spanish police and Morocco's General Directorate of Territorial Surveillance (DGST), Spanish authorities arrest five people across the provinces of Valencia, Caceres, Alicante, and Gipuzkoa. The terror network reportedly collected funds from crimes across Europe to finance terror activities. The suspects reportedly moved large sums—at least 200,000 euros—through cryptocurrencies and international shipments. The suspects are also accused of indoctrinating and radicalizing people to eventually carry out terror attacks. Source: Morocco World News
- November 9, 2023 - November 21, 2023: On November 9, two suspects on a motorcycle shoot Alejo Vidal-Quadras, the founder of the far-right Vox party and former vice-president of the European parliament, in Madrid. Vidal-Quadras survives the shooting but is left with damage to his jaw. According to Vidal-Quadras, the shooting could be linked to his opposition of the Iranian regime and his placement on Iran's blacklist of terrorists and entities. Vidal-Quadras is connected to the National Council of Resistance of Iran (CNRI), a political coalition that seeks the overthrow of the Iranian regime, which reportedly financed 80 percent of Vox's campaign in the 2014 European elections. CNRI supports Vidal-Quadras' suspicions. Several weeks prior to the attack, which police deemed to have been carried out by a professional hitman, Vidal-Quadras reportedly received death threats. Three suspects were ultimately arrested on November 21, including two Spanish men and one British woman. One of the suspects is reportedly a "radical Shia Muslim" and had hired a paid assassin to target Vidal-Quadras. Sources: El Economista, El Mundo, Guardian, Daily Mail
- November 9, 2023: Spanish police arrest 14 Pakistani nationals in Catalonia, Valencia, Guipuzcoa, Vitoria, Logrono, and Lleida, on suspicion of membership in a terror cell. The suspects reportedly formed a terror cell linked to Tehreek-e-Labbaik Pakistan (TLP), a Pakistani Islamist political party, and disseminated jihadist and radicalization messages online. Source: Times of India
- October 23, 2023: Spanish police arrest four individuals in Madrid, Cubelles, and Hueter-Tajar on suspicion of crimes including the glorification of terrorism. One of the suspects reportedly downloaded a bomb-making manual, while another had "taken the first steps" to replicate a peroxide-based bomb used during the August 2017 terror attacks in Barcelona. Source: Arab News
- October 18, 2023: Hundreds of pro-Palestinian demonstrators riot in front of Melilla's central synagogue, Or Zaruah Yamin Benarroch. During the riot, protesters shout "murderous Israel" until police arrive to disperse the crowd. The riot was reportedly incited and planned by a pro-ISIS and pro-Hamas individual that Spanish police later arrest in March 2024. The man is accused of encouraging others to "take up arms" against the Jewish community in Melilla. Sources: Euro Weekly News, European Jewish Congress, Algemeiner
- September 8, 2023: In a joint operation carried out by Morocco, Spain, and Europol, a man is arrested in Pamplona on charges of terrorist collaboration with ISIS with specific allegations including indoctrination, recruitment, and support for terror activities. The suspect reportedly possessed manuals intended for self-training in terror tactics such as the handling of weapons, manufacturing explosives, detonators, and poisons, as well as guides intended to conceal terror activities online and carry out secure financial transactions. Source: Morocco World News
- July 27, 2023: Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary, a British rapper and alleged jihadist, is found dead in his cell in a Spanish prison. Bary, who joined al-Qaeda and ISIS factions in Syria in 2013, was arrested in 2020 as he attempted to gain entry into Spain on accusations of leading a jihadist terror cell and was set to face 9 years in prison. Bary's father was a notorious Egyptian al-Qaeda operative convicted of terror charges including orchestrating the bombings at U.S. embassies in Africa in 1998 that led to the deaths of 224 people. Source: NBC News
- July 19, 2023: Moroccan and Spanish authorities arrest two individuals in the Moroccan town of Nador and the Spanish town of Lleida in a joint operation. The suspects reportedly planned to carry out terror attacks in Europe under the instructions of Islamic State leaders. Source: Atalayar

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

- January 27, 2023: Spanish police arrest an alleged jihadist in Girona. The suspect, a Spanish national of Moroccan descent, reportedly planned to carry out a gun attack on a popular tourist beach in Benidorm.
The suspect, who reportedly practiced shooting cardboard silhouettes at his home, intended to then release a recording of the attacks onto social media platforms associated with the Islamic State. Source: Sur in English
- January 26, 2023: A machete-wielding man attacks clergymen at two different churches in Algeciras, southern Spain.
The attack kills at least one and injures four others. The assailant, a Moroccan national that was set to be deported, is arrested under potential terrorism charges. Sources: Reuters, Reuters
- January 11, 2023: Moroccan and Spanish police carry out a joint operation to dismantle an ISIS terror cell operating across the two countries. The security forces arrest three members, including one in Morocco's Chtouka Ait Baha province, and two others in Spain's Almeria province. The members, who were unable to join ISIS elements in Africa's Sahel region, intended to recruit more members to the cell and were intent on carrying out terrorist operations across other regions. Source: Morocco World News
- - : According to American and European officials, Russian military intelligence officers are reportedly behind a two-month long letter bomb campaign in Spain.
Recipients of the explosives were the prime minister, defense minister, and foreign diplomats. Investigators believe the white nationalist Russian Imperial Movement (RIM) is connected to the attack as the designated global terrorist organization had members whose activities were tracked to Spain. Reportedly, the aim of the mail campaign was to signal RIM's ability to carry out attacks throughout Europe, including those who back Ukraine against Russia's invasion of the country. Source: New York Times
- May 9, 2022: Spain's National Court finds Mohamed C. and Anaas E. guilty of attempting to recruit young Moroccans to join terror groups including ISIS and al-Qaeda in Donostia, northwestern Spain.
The two are expected to each carry out a nine-year sentence. Mohamed C. reportedly took advantage of his position as an imam at a mosque in Herrera and at the Islamic Cultural Association in San Sebastian to find new recruits. Mohamed C. and Anaas E. also collaborated on social networks to "extol jihadist terrorist groups, their members and leaders." Source: Morocco World News
- November 17, 2021: An Israeli court sentences a Spanish woman, Juana Ruiz Sanchez Rishmawi, to 13 months in Israeli prison for unknowingly working at an organization that transferred funds to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) group. Rishmawi worked for Health Work Committees, an organization that was declared illegal in January 2020 by the Israeli military, and reportedly had transferred millions in funding from European governments to the PFLP. Source: Times of Israel
- October 13, 2021: Spanish police arrest five suspects believed to be part of an ISIS affiliated cell.
The suspects, four of which were in Barcelona and one in Madrid, reportedly sought to acquire weapons and recruit others to their cause. The leader of the group, known as "Sheikh" had been arrested in Turkey in 2016 when he attempted to join ISIS. According to Europol and media sources, he was released a year later and toured several countries including Malaysia, Tanzania, and Algeria, where he reportedly sought to recruit members for ISIS. In March 2021, he was detected entering Spain and special surveillance measures were put in place that later tracked him to Barcelona where he surrounded himself with highly radicalized Algerian nationals. Sources: Associated Press, Europol
- July 31, 2021: Spain's Guardia Civil intelligence service, in cooperation with Interpol and Algerian authorities, arrests an Algerian man in Mallorca on charges of terrorism.
The Guardia Civil reported the man is suspected of leading a gang that trafficked people from North Africa to Europe and also sent fighters to support jihadist groups in Libya. The suspect allegedly headed a trafficking organization that sent terrorists to Spain from Algeria. Source: Washington Post
- May 27, 2021: Spain's highest criminal court, the Audiencia Nacional, sentences three men—Mohamed Houli Chemlal, Driss Oukabir, and Ben Iazza—for assisting the perpetrators of the August 2017 terror attacks in Catalonia, which killed 16 people and wounded 140 others. ISIS claimed responsibility for the attacks in which assailants used vehicles to hit pedestrians in both Barcelona's La Rambla Boulevard and the coastal town of Cambrils. The Barcelona attackers also stabbed onlookers. Chemlal was sentenced to 53 and a half years imprisonment, while Oukabir was sentenced to 46 years imprisonment for belonging to a terrorist organization, possessing explosives, terrorist destruction, and causing serious injury. Iazza was acquitted of belonging to a terrorist organization, but was sentenced to eight years imprisonment for collaborating with a terrorist group through lending identity documents and a van that "he knew would be used to buy and transport chemical products." Source: Guardian
- May 8, 2021: Spanish police, in cooperation with the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation and Morocco's state security forces, arrest a Moroccan man in Barcelona under suspicion of planning a terror attack in the name of ISIS.
Spanish police have monitored the suspect for four years, but claim he was particularly radicalized following Spain's national lockdown in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic when ISIS encouraged followers to carry out attacks in their countries of residence. Source: ABC News
- April 27, 2021: The Spanish National Police, in cooperation with Europol, arrest three members of a terrorist cell in Granada.
The suspects were arrested on suspicion of encouraging terrorist attacks against France. Authorities discovered numerous videos on social media accounts—which amassed over 19,000 followers—threatening violent actions against France, its citizens, and its interests abroad. The suspects allegedly targeted France after French magazine Charlie Hebdo republished caricatures of the Prophet Mohammed in September 2020. Source: Homeland Security Today
- April 21, 2021: Spanish police arrest Abdel-Majed Abdel Bary in Almería, southern Spain. Bary, a former London rapper, is the son of an Egyptian al-Qaeda operative that was convicted in 2012 for involvement in the 1998 bombings of two U.S. embassies.
According to a statement released by the Spanish National Police, Bary is "one of the most sought terrorists in Europe, both because of his criminal trajectory in the ranks of Daesh and because of the high danger that he represented." Although Bary was allegedly "disillusioned" by ISIS after fighting for the jihadist group in Syria, he still has to face punishment for his crimes. Source: Associated Press

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

- March 26, 2021: The Spanish National Police, in cooperation with Europol, arrest three men in Madrid and Santa Cruz de Tenerife for their involvement in the facilitation of terrorist financing.
The suspects allegedly used a non-governmental organization (NGO) to finance the activities of al-Qaeda affiliated militants. The front-NGO claimed to provide aid for Syrian orphans, but the funds received were used to not only finance the activities of terrorist fighters, but was used to cover the costs of a school for orphaned children that trained future terrorist fighters. Source: EUROPOL
- February 4, 2021: The Cartagena headquarters of Spain’s Podemos party is attacked, with unknown assailants firebombing the building. No one was injured in the attack. Podemos, the anti-austerity and pro-democracy movement, claimed the incident was “Fascist terrorism” as the offices were previously graffitied with the word “Redes” (“reds”). Source: Euronews
- December 10, 2020: Spanish police arrest two men in Andalusia and Pamplona.
The suspects allegedly sold drugs to buy weapons to plan a future race war. After a year-long investigation, Spanish authorities discovered messages online in which the suspects praised the Christchurch shooter and expressed the intention to buy weapons and create “isolated white supremacist groups.” The men appeared in court in Catalonia on December 13, where they faced charges of race hate crimes, possession of arms and explosives, support for racist terrorism, and offenses against public health. Both suspects were released on bail and a trial date has yet to be announced. Source: Reuters
- March 24, 2020: The Spanish national court sentences Maroiane B., a terror suspect of Moroccan nationality, to two years in prison. The suspect was accused of promoting and spreading ISIS propaganda. Source: Morocco World News
- February 4, 2020: Muntasir Media, an ISIS-supporting media group that has previously warned of increased terror attacks in Spain, distributes a Spanish-language translation of Inspire, an al-Qaeda magazine.
The magazine, and its detailed instructions for developing homemade explosives, previously inspired the 2013 Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev and Ahmad Khan Rahimi, the perpetrator of the 2016 bombing in New York’s Chelsea neighborhood. This particular issue of Inspire provided instructions on how to make bombs to be used for homegrown attacks. Sources: Homeland Security Today, Reuters, New York Times
- December 4, 2019: Moroccan and Spanish national police arrest three suspected ISIS supporters in Morocco’s Nador region and Madrid. The suspects adhered to ISIS’s propaganda and sought to plan terrorist attacks. One of the suspects was accused of organizing meetings with other radical Islamists and for being in contact with jihadists in Syria and Mali. Source: Defense Post
- November 23, 2019: Spanish authorities, following the guidance of foreign intelligence services operating in southwestern Algeria, issue a warning claiming a possible terror attack against Spanish citizens working at the Saharawi refugee camp in Western Sahara. ISIS-affiliated groups operate in the refugee area. Source: ABC News
- September 23, 2019: Barcelona police arrest nine “Catalan separatists” from the group Committees to Defend the Republic (CDR), for planning a terrorist attack for the second anniversary of the failed 2017 Catalonia independence referendum. The suspects belonged to CDR’s Technical Response Team, supposedly the most violent faction of the group. Source: European Views
- June 17, 2019: Muntasir Media, an ISIS-supporting media group, issues a threat against the Sagrada Familia Church, a famous Barcelona Catholic church.
It is not the first time that the media group has directed threats at the church. Source: Homeland Security Today
- April 17, 2019: Spanish police thwart a terrorist plot in Seville, arresting a suspected jihadist in Morocco.
The suspect sought to target Easter celebrations in the city. Source: Reuters
- February 22, 2019: A dissident group dedicated to toppling the North Korean regime, known as Cheollima Civil Defense or Free Joseon, breaks into the North Korean embassy in Madrid.
Ten suspects hold embassy employees hostage, fleeing hours later after stealing various communication electronics. The group’s leader, Adrian Hong Chang, escaped to the United States following the attack and shared “audiovisual material” with F.B.I. forces. North Korean authorities claim the raid was a “grave terrorist attack,” and a “flagrant violation of international law.” Following the incident, an international arrest warrant is issued for Free Joseon’s leader, a Mexican national living in the U.S. named Adrian Hong Chang, and an American named Sam Ruy. Source: New York Times
- January 15, 2019: Spanish police arrest 17 people in Barcelona and Igualada suspected of belonging to a terrorist cell attempting to plot an attack.
Source: France 24
- October 23, 2018: Spanish National Police arrest two men in Valencia and Alicante for disseminating jihadist propaganda through social networks.
The propaganda allegedly incited hate and violence against Westerners and included images of the conflict in Syria. The suspects were Syrian nationals who had connections to ISIS and al-Qaeda, with one suspect allegedly holding a senior position in the “information structure” of ISIS. Source: U.S. Department of State
- October 2, 2018: The Ministry of Interior carries out an operation to counter radicalization across 17 prisons, targeting over 25 ISIS-affiliated inmates who sought to radicalize and recruit other inmates.
>hr>Source: U.S. Department of State
- August 20, 2018: A man armed with a knife is shot and killed by Catalan police after entering a police station and shouting “Allahu Akbar.” Authorities believe the man had entered the station with the intention of killing police officers. The attack occurred days after the one-year anniversary of the 2017 vehicular-ramming attacks in Barcelona and Cambrils. Sources: Guardian, El País
- April 10, 2018: The High Court in Barcelona sentences 10 members of a Terrassa terrorist cell—including five Moroccans, four Spaniards, and a Brazilian—to eight to 12 years in prison.

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

- The suspects belonged to a group called “Islamic Fraternity, Group for preaching jihad,” with links to ISIS. The 10 jihadists sought to carry out attacks against the police, banks and Jewish institutions throughout Barcelona, and planned to film a decapitation. Source: The Local
- September 22, 2017: Spanish police arrest a Moroccan man suspected of association with a terrorist group that carried out fatal attacks in Barcelona and Cambrils in August 2017.
He is suspected of helping the cell obtain the ingredients used to make over 220 pounds of explosives as well as providing the vehicles to transport the explosives. Source: The Local
 - September 6, 2017: Spanish police and security authorities in Morocco arrest six men belonging to a terrorist cell in Morocco and Melilla, a Spanish enclave in North Africa.
The leader of the group was a Spaniard of Moroccan origin, and the others were Moroccan nationals. The suspects were accused of planning large-scale terror attacks, and were believed to have held meetings to conduct physical training in preparation of committing violent acts. Source: The Local
 - August 17, 2017 - August 18, 2017: On August 17, a vehicular-ramming attack on the Las Ramblas pedestrian walkway in Barcelona kills 13 people and wounds more than 100 others.
The following morning there is another vehicular attack in Cambrils, a coastal town south of Barcelona. The August 18th attack kills one woman and injures seven others. ISIS claims responsibility for both attacks. Police link the perpetrators to a single cell that had planned a series of bomb attacks until a premature explosion destroyed their bomb materials the day before the Barcelona attack. Sources: BBC News, BBC News, Guardian, Guardian, Reuters, Associated Press, New York Times, Independent
 - September 28, 2016: Spanish, German, and Belgian authorities arrest five people, four Spanish citizens and one Moroccan, for allegedly forming an ISIS terror cell.
The suspects promoted ISIS content on a number of social media sites, including a Facebook page with approximately 32,500 followers. Sources: Reuters, Deutsche Welle
 - April 19, 2016: Spanish police arrest a 26-year-old Moroccan national named Mohamed Harrak on the island of Majorca.
According to Spain’s Ministry of the Interior, Harrak recruited new jihadists for ISIS via online forums, organized covert travel routes between Europe and Syria, and was involved in the planning of a terrorist attack in Spain. Sources: Daily Mail, International Business Times, New York Times
 - March 3, 2016: Spanish authorities confiscate 20,000 uniforms and other supplies hidden in shipping containers at Spanish ports to be shipped to ISIS and other Islamic extremist groups.
The seizure has been linked to the February 2016 arrest of seven individuals, five of Spanish citizenship, accused of providing logistical support to ISIS and the Nusra Front. Sources: CNN, New York Times
 - December 11, 2015: Militants explode a car bomb in the diplomatic district in Kabul, Afghanistan, after attempting to breach the premises of the Spanish embassy compound.
The attack kills at least one Spanish security officer and wounds 10 others. The Taliban claims responsibility for the attack. Sources: Reuters, Wall Street Journal, United Nations
 - November 13, 2015: Three Spanish citizens are killed in an ISIS orchestrated attack in Paris.
The attack claims a total of 130 lives and wounds 413. Then-Spanish Interior Minister Jorge Fernández Díaz states that the attack’s ringleader, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, had attempted to recruit Spaniards to fight with ISIS in Syria. Sources: The Local, New York Times, International Business Times
 - August 9, 2009: Marking ETA’s 50th year, the group sets off three bombs on the Spanish island of Majorca.
There are no reported casualties. It is the last reported ETA attack on Spanish soil. Sources: The Local, Reuters
 - July 30, 2009: ETA blows up a police car on the Spanish island of Majorca, killing two officers.
The attack comes a day after ETA bombs a Civil Guard barracks building in Burgos, wounding 65 people. The attacks coincide with ETA’s 30th anniversary. Sources: Guardian, BBC News
 - March 7, 2008: Former Socialist Party councilor Isaias Carrasco is shot and killed outside his home in the Basque town of Mondragon.
Spanish Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero accuses ETA of trying to interfere in upcoming elections. Source: BBC News
 - December 30, 2006: ETA sets off a van bomb in the parking lot of a new airport in Madrid, killing two Ecuadorian nationals and injuring 19.
The attack, known as the Madrid-Barajas Airport bombing, ends a unilateral ceasefire that ETA announced in March of 2006. Source: CNN
 - February 9, 2005: Following a warning from ETA, a car bomb wounds 40 in Madrid.
Police arrest 14 ETA members after the bombing on unrelated charges. Source: New York Times
 - April 3, 2004: Seven of the 11-M suspects kill themselves and a police officer with suicide bombs after Spanish special forces track them to an apartment in southern Madrid.
Sources: Telegraph, CNN
 - March 11, 2004: Islamic extremists place 10 bombs on four Madrid-bound commuter trains.
The explosions kill 191 people and injure nearly 1,800. This attack becomes known as “11-M.” Al-Qaeda claims responsibility for the attack two days later. Spanish investigators believe that the attack was inspired but not directed by al-Qaeda. Sources: Guardian, CNN, Telegraph
 - Shortly after a warning call from ETA on July 23, bombs explode within minutes of each other at hotels in the Spanish resort cities of Alicante and Benidorm, wounding 13.
The bombs targeted the Hotel Residencia Bahia in Alicante and the Hotel Nadal in Benidorm. On July 27, a car bomb explodes outside the Santander airport following a warning call from the ETA. The bombing destroys a dozen cars but causes no injuries. Sources: BBC News, BBC News, Al Jazeera
 - An ETA bomb in Sanguesa kills two policemen. It is the last deadly ETA attack before the group declares a ceasefire in 2006.

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

Source:

- November 21, 2000: ETA murders former cabinet minister Ernest Lluch in Barcelona.
Source: Telegraph
- Basque councilman Miguel Angel Blanco is kidnapped and killed, leading to demonstrations attended by six million people demanding an end to ETA violence.
Source: BBC News
- Police foil an ETA plot to kill King Juan Carlos.
Sources: Telegraph, Telegraph
- June 20, 1987: A car bomb explodes in the parking garage of a Barcelona department store, killing 21 and wounding more than 30. ETA claim responsibility but later apologize for the “mistake.” Sources: BBC News, Associated Press
- September 9, 1985: An American tourist is killed by ETA’s first car bomb in Madrid.
The explosion also wounds 16 civil guards Sources: Reuters, Telegraph
- ETA kill 118 people: the deadliest year in the group’s history to date.
Source: BBC News
- December 20, 1973: ETA kills Spanish Prime Minister Luis Carrero Blanco when his car passes over remote-detonated explosives planted in Madrid.
The attack occurs after the prime minister attends a Catholic mass at the San Francisco de Borja Church. Source: BBC News
- ETA kills Meliton Manzanas, the secret police chief in the Basque city of San Sebastian.
It is the group’s first fatal attack. Sources: BBC News, Reuters
- July 18, 1961: ETA is unsuccessful in derailing a train transporting politicians and supporters of Spanish dictator General Francisco Franco.
This is ETA’s first attempt at a violent attack. Source: New York Times
- Euskadi Ta Askatasuna (or “ETA”), which translates to “Basque Homeland and Freedom,” is founded with the objective of gaining independence for a Basque state in northern Spain and southwestern France.
ETA grew from a leftist student resistance movement during General Franco’s repressive military dictatorship. Julen Madariaga is one of the group’s founders. Sources: BBC News, Guardian, Human Rights Watch, Council on Foreign Relations

Domestic Counter-Extremism

The Spanish Criminal Code outlaws terrorism and any act of collaboration with a terrorist organization. The Spanish Criminal Code also prohibits incitement “to incur in discriminatory acts, hate or violence” under Article 510. “Hate speech” is punishable by imprisonment for one to three years and a fine of 6 to 12 months’ salary. (Sources: U.S. Department of State, U.N. Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights)

The Center for Intelligence against Terrorism and Organized Crime (CITCO), the National Police, and the Civil Guard are responsible for enforcing the Spanish Criminal Code as it relates to terrorism. In 2015, the Spanish police arrested 100 suspected Islamic extremists. Between the 2004 Madrid train bombings and February 2016, Spain arrested approximately 600 alleged terrorists. (Sources: La Moncloa, Human Rights Watch, Associated Press, BBC News)

In 2014, Spanish authorities imprisoned more than 700 former ETA members for participating in terrorism. Spain has been scrutinized for exercising harsher punishments on ETA members. One case led to the intervention of the European Court of Human Rights, which forced the release of an ETA operative who was sentenced to 3,000 years in prison (despite Spanish law permitting a maximum sentence of 40-years). At the time ETA announced its dissolution in April 2018, the number of former ETA members imprisoned had reportedly dropped to under 300. (Sources: Newsweek, The Economist, DW)

In recent years, the Spanish government has largely focused on preventing terror attacks in the context of growing Islamic extremism. In September 2014, Secretary of State for Security Francisco Martinez ramped up security measures in conjunction with the government’s escalation of the terror threat level. Law enforcement took extra precautions in monitoring transit hubs, hospitals, government buildings, and other key sites. The decision was primarily a response to ISIS’s expansion in Iraq and Syria and direct threats against Western countries. On December 5, 2013, Spain launched the Cyber Defense Committee, charged with establishing a national cyber-security strategy to protect sensitive information networks across all departments. (Sources: Wall Street Journal, U.S. Department of State)

According to the U.S. Department of State, Spain is in the process of improving its legal framework to (a) directly address the flow of foreign fighters to conflict zones like Iraq and Syria; (b) enable the government to more aggressively prosecute suspected jihadists not already associated with criminal organizations; and (c) prevent online recruitment. Given its experience with ETA, Spain’s jurisprudence and bureaucratic systems have the capacity to investigate and prosecute suspected terrorists. (Sources: U.S. Department of State, Library of Congress)

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

In its December 2017 National Security Strategy, the Spanish government identified jihadist terrorism as “one of the principal problems confronting the international community.” In February 2019, the Spanish government launched a new counterterrorism strategy focused on “Preventing, Protecting, Persecuting and Preparing a response.” Under these pillars, the government seeks to identify extremists and disrupt terrorist plots while protecting potential targets. The strategy also seeks to identify at-risk individuals and communities in order to prevent radicalization. The Preparing a response section refers to minimizing the impact of terrorist activities. (Sources: U.S. Department of State, El Pais, Government of Spain)

The new strategy specifically targets jihadists, particularly returning foreign fighters affiliated with ISIS and al-Qaeda. The strategy also targets Spanish prisons. Fewer than 15 of the 140 jihadist prisoners in Spanish prisons have signed up for deradicalization programs, according to the Interior Ministry. Under the new strategy, the government will seek to boost the number of prison guards and support for deradicalization programs. The strategy is effective through 2023, though it is subject to annual review. The new strategy replaces the previous 2012 strategy, which expired in 2017. 2019 marked the first time the government has publicized its strategy. (Sources: El Pais, Government of Spain)

In May 2016, the city of Malaga in southern Spain joined the “Strong Cities Network,” launched by the United Nations in September 2015 to build community resilience and cohesion in order to counter violent extremism. Malaga serves as a pilot for community-based counter violent extremism (CVE) programs. For example, Malaga has a youth radicalization intervention program as well as a number of programs designed to improve communication between government agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). (Source: U.S. Department of State)

On June 17, 2019, Spain deployed more than 40,000 police officers from the National Police and the Civil Guard to monitor tourist hotspots and other sites across the country. The three month Operation Summer began on July 1 and was in place until the end of September in an effort to boost anti-terror surveillance during the country’s hectic vacation season. The operation was conducted in response to multiple threats by ISIS-affiliated groups against Spanish tourist sites and destinations. (Source: Daily Mirror)

Immigration Policy

As part of its comprehensive immigration policies, Spain participated in the U.S. Immigration Advisory Program. Through promoting collaboration between U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials stationed at Madrid-Barajas International Airport, airline security personnel, and local police, this program is designed to monitor high-risk passengers traveling to the United States. The program has aided Spain in improving security and detecting false documents at its borders. Spain has recently introduced a number of new technologies to further secure its borders. For example, Spain has implemented a system to read EU passports with biometric data, improved explosive trace detection capabilities, and introduced an “External Surveillance System” for maritime policing. (Source: U.S. Department of State)

In January 2015, then-Interior Minister Jorge Fernández Díaz also called for a discussion over the European Union’s Schengen Treaty, which removed passport checks on EU internal borders. Díaz argued that “the existing mobility in the European Union is facilitating the movements (of jihadists) to any country and also to our country.” He planned to have Spain move “back to border controls” to limit the movement of Islamist fighters returning to Europe from the Middle East. Díaz also petitioned for the creation of a European passenger database. This would allow EU member states to share passenger information and thereby enhance border security. In February 2015, the Spanish government and opposition party agreed to implement new measures to address individuals in Spain who were planning to join Islamic extremist groups in war zones. The announcement came in the aftermath of the Charlie Hebdo attacks in Paris and was reaffirmed by the Interior Minister after the November 2015 Paris attacks. (Sources: NDTV, Business Insider, International Business Times)

The government’s efforts to counter domestic extremism are closely associated with its clampdown on illegal immigration and efforts to integrate existing immigrant communities. Spain’s Foundation for Pluralism and Co-existence, a public office through the Ministry of Justice, supports integration of minority religious communities. The Foundation has provided grants to non-governmental organizations developing programs and activities aimed at social cohesion.

International Counter-Extremism

In the aftermath of 9/11, Spain took a leading role in international counterterrorism efforts. Spain has been a key participant of the Counter Terrorism Committee (CTC), established by the U.N. Security Council to monitor states’ compliance with counterterrorism standards. Spain has contributed significantly to the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS and, in 2016, deployed over 300 Spanish troops to a military-training mission in Iraq alongside the U.S. mission. (Sources: Human Rights Watch, U.S. Department of State)

Spain: Extremism and Terrorism

Spain also helped found the Global Counterterrorism Forum (GCTF). The GCTF has a long-term goal of reducing vulnerability to terrorism by creating a comprehensive approach to countering radicalization and recruitment, preventing terrorist attacks, and prosecuting the perpetrators of terrorist acts. Spain has also been a long-time member of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), an inter-governmental body that works to promote policies that combat money laundering and terrorist financing, and the Egmont Group, a global association of financial intelligence units. (Sources: U.S. Department of State, Egmont Group)

Since 2004, Spain has been a member of an informal working group on jihadism known as the 5 + 5. This unofficial network consists of defense ministers from Spain, Portugal, France, Italy, Malta, Mauritania, Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, and Libya. The group exchanges information on threats posed by Islamic extremism and foreign fighters in the region. The Spanish Civil Guard also utilizes Europol information to combat terrorism and organized crime. (Source: U.S. Department of State)

Spain has also been an active partner in U.S. and African efforts to track and disrupt transnational terrorism. U.S. officials from the Customs and Border Protection and Immigration and Customs Enforcement agencies have advised Spanish airline security personnel and police in screening high-risk passengers, particularly those flying to the United States. In Africa, Spain has increased cooperation with Algeria, Mali, and Mauritania. Together, these countries have sought to combat and contain the threat of al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM). Spain has also provided funding to Mali and Mauritania to support CVE programs. (Sources: U.S. Department of State \(2013\), U.S. Department of State \(2014\))

As of March 2019, Spanish agents in Syria were participating in Operation Gallant Phoenix, a U.S.-led operation to identify European foreign fighters in Syria and Iraq. U.S. forces launched the mission in 2015 from a base in Jordan to gather evidence such as fingerprints and computer files in formerly ISIS-held territory in order to identify foreign fighters. The goal is to then bring charges against the individuals if and when they return to their home countries. Spain is one of 21 countries reportedly participating in the mission. (Sources: El Pais, Brussels Times, Deutsche Welle)

Spanish authorities played a critical role in identifying the armed perpetrator of the thwarted Amsterdam-Paris passenger train attack that occurred on August 21, 2015. Spanish security services noted that the suspect, Ayoub El Kahzani, lived in Algeciras, a port city in southern Spain, during 2014 and was already known as a potential terrorist threat. Spain had identified El Kahzani, a Moroccan national, to France and Belgium as a person who had joined an Islamist group. (Source: New York Times)

Public Opinion