Overview

Executive Summary:

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS) is a U.S.-designated terrorist group and al-Qaeda's newest affiliate.¹ Founded in September 2014, the group has claimed responsibility for numerous terrorist attacks in the region, including the September 6, 2014, attempted seizure of a Pakistan navy frigate in a naval dockyard in Karachi, Pakistan. The group has also claimed responsibility for the murders of secular activists, writers, professors, and doctors in Bangladesh.² AQIS reportedly operates in Afghanistan, Pakistan, India, Myanmar, and Bangladesh.³

AQIS is al-Qaeda's fifth official chapter.

AQIS was formed after a two-year effort to consolidate jihadist factions on the Indian Subcontinent, according to al-Qaeda leader Ayman al-Zawahiri, who announced the affiliate's formation in a video dated September 3, 2014.⁴ Included in the group's ranks are Taliban fighters loyal to both Zawahiri and Taliban emir Mullah Mawlawi Haibatullah Akhundzada, who assumed this position in May 2015 following the death of the Taliban's former emir, Mullah Akhtar Mohammad Mansour.⁵

Analysts generally believe that al-Zawahiri created AQIS in order to steal the limelight from expanding ISIS and therefore promote al-Qaeda's brand. The Diplomat's Jordan Olmstead asserts that "AQIS isn't about India—it's about preserving al-Qaeda's safe havens in Pakistan and Afghanistan," especially amid rivalries with ISIS and the Pakistani army for influence and control over the Afghanistan-Pakistan border region.⁶

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS)

Flashpoint Global Partners senior analyst Laith Alkhouri called the group's formation at the time "a serious counternarrative to the ISIS expansion."⁷

However, an unnamed jihadist close to AQIS told Reuters, "After the killing of Osama bin Laden, al-Qaeda's new chief al-Zawahiri started the reorganization of al-Qaeda, with its main focus on South Asia." Sources close to AQIS's former emir (leader), Asim Umar, told Reuters that Umar has eyed the Indian subcontinent for many years, and has released videos propagandizing to Kashmiri Muslims in a hope to recruit them to fight the secular governments.⁸

AQIS has claimed responsibility for the murders of a number of secular activists.

Analysts have downplayed the threat of AQIS and al-Qaeda central to the subcontinent. "Al-Qaeda first mentioned India as a target in 1996, when bin Laden made a reference to both Jammu and Kashmir and Assam," said Ajai Sahni of India's Institute for Conflict Management. "Since then, it has not been able to achieve anything significant in both these Indian states."⁹ However, AQIS launched its first attack three days after its founding. On September 6, 2014, AQIS militants attempted to seize a Pakistani navy frigate, from which they planned to launch missiles at nearby American and Pakistani ships. Ten militants and one officer died in an ensuing suicide bombing and shootout.¹⁰ AQIS has claimed responsibility for the murder of a number of secular activists. In May 2015, the group claimed responsibility for the murder of atheist bloggers Avijit Roy and Washiqur Rahman in Bangladesh and liberal professors Mohammad Shakil Auj and Shafiul Islam in Pakistan.¹¹ In October 2015, AQIS's Bangladesh branch, known as Ansar al Islam, claimed responsibility for the killing of Faisal Arefin Dipon, a Bangladeshi publisher of secular books. Another publisher, Ahmedur Rashid Tutul, was also targeted but not killed.¹² In April 2016, Ansar al Islam claimed responsibility for the murders of secular campaigner Nazimuddin Samad, and the editors of an LGBT magazine, Xulhaz Mannan and Tanay Mojumdar.¹³

On September 23, 2019, the United States launched a joint operation with the Afghan military, carrying out a raid in Musa Qala, southern Afghanistan. On October 8, 2019, Afghanistan's National Directorate of Security confirmed that along with AQIS leader, Asim Umar, six other militants were killed during the operation. The NDS also claimed that Osama Mehmood, AQIS's spokesman, is now the leader of AQIS.¹⁴

Doctrine:

Like al-Qaeda Central, AQIS ascribes to a Salafi ideology whose central tenet is waging jihad in order to wrest power from what al-Qaeda leader Ayman al-Zawahiri calls the "infidel enemy" and impose rule by sharia (Islamic law).¹⁵ In the group's first video, released on September 3, 2014, Zawahiri declared that AQIS would "raise the flag of jihad, return the Islamic rule, and [empower] the Shariah of Allah across the Indian subcontinent."¹⁶

[AQIS seeks to] establish sharia in the land and to free the occupied land of Muslims in the Indian sub-continent. Ayman al-Zawahiri, leader of al-Qaeda

Salafis hold that Muslims should emulate the actions of the first generation of Muslim leaders—known as the righteous ancestors (al-Salaf al-Salih)—and disregard more than a thousand years of Islamic jurisprudence. Al-Qaeda believes it is fighting a "defensive jihad" against the United States and its allies, defending Muslim lands from the "new crusade led by America against the Islamic nations..." according to Osama bin Laden.¹⁷ In the first issue of al-Qaeda's new English language magazine Resurgence,¹⁸ which appeared on jihadist forums in October 2014, its editor Hasaan Yusuf wrote: "It was Jihad that brought Islam to the Indian Subcontinent, and it will be Jihad again that will overturn the legacy of imperialism from Pakistan to Bangladesh and beyond."¹⁹ Through its "defensive jihad," AQIS seeks to "[e]stablish sharia in the land and to free the occupied land of Muslims in the Indian sub-continent," as Ayman al-Zawahiri said in the video announcing AQIS's formation.²⁰

Necessary to AQIS's ideology is the indoctrinated prophecy—found in the Hadith, oral traditions of the prophet Muhammad—of Ghazwa-e-Hind, the "final battle in India."²¹ Al-Qaeda and AQIS members believe in an impending, apocalyptic war with the Indian state, resulting in the fall of the Hindu nation to Islam and the recreation of the caliphate.²² In Zawahiri's announcement of the new affiliate, "Pakistan was mentioned only as a country that needed to be brought under full Sharia rule while Hindu India was portrayed as the enemy of Islam," said Husain Haqqani, Hudson Institute senior fellow and former Pakistani ambassador to the U.S.²³

A 20-page "Code of Conduct" published by AQIS in June 2017 reiterated the group's intentions of attacking targets—particularly military related—in Afghanistan, Pakistan, India, Myanmar, and Bangladesh. While the document claimed that Hindu, Muslim, and Buddhist civilians and places of worship would not be attacked, it called for increased attacks on both active-duty and off-duty soldiers, as well as Americans operating in

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS)

Afghanistan and Pakistan.²⁴ The “Code of Conduct” also reiterated the group’s allegiance to al-Qaeda Central and the Taliban, and stated that one of its principal aims is defending and strengthening the “Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan” by working with the Taliban.²⁵

AQIS prioritizes American targets in Pakistan and strives for a complete American withdrawal from the region, according to the Code of Conduct document.²⁶ While AQIS maintains its focus on jihad in the regions specified above, it also supports and espouses al-Qaeda’s broader objective to conduct attacks against the United States and other Western targets.²⁷

Organizational Structure:

In December 2014, AQIS spokesman Osama Mehmoud released a statement detailing the group’s operational structure, saying, “Although al Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent was announced this year [2014], we started operating under one Shura [consultative] committee and one commander almost a year ago.”²⁸ In its “Code of Conduct” released in June 2017, AQIS explained that it operates with an emir, a vice emir, and a shura council, which acts as an advisory board. The emir and shura council can consult with each other to make administrative changes. AQIS also has a sharia committee, which provides guidance on matters of sharia law. A military committee provides guidance on military matters, such as the treatment of prisoners.²⁹

Like other al-Qaeda outfits, AQIS’s command structure may also include political, propaganda, and religious arms. However, AQIS is closely linked to the Taliban, and may therefore share some organizational aspects with that group. AQIS members have at times fought under the Taliban’s flag and are integrated into the Taliban’s chain-of-command. According to the Long War Journal, this may account for AQIS’s apparent lack of battlefield propaganda.³⁰

Analysts have alleged that AQIS may be broken into regional branches, including in Dhaka, Bangladesh, and Karachi, Pakistan.³¹ AQIS’s Bangladesh branch is officially known as Ansar al Islam, and has claimed responsibility for a number of the attacks against secularists in the country.³²

Al-Qaeda officials have also called on AQIS to carry out attacks in Myanmar in response to government-inflicted violence against the Rohingya, a Muslim minority group.³³ The Myanmar-based Harakat al-Yaqin, in part responsible for the recent escalation in violence in the country, is reported to have had contact with al-Qaeda officials in the past.³⁴

In a July 2020 report published by the United Nations Security Council, it was alleged that around 150 to 200 AQIS members from Bangladesh, India, Myanmar, and Pakistan are operating under the Taliban in the Nimruz, Helmand, and Kandahar provinces in Afghanistan. According to the report, AQIS is allegedly planning retaliatory operations in the area to avenge the death of its former leader, Asim Umar.³⁵

Financing:

Little is publicly known about AQIS’s funding. It is suspected that AQIS is supported by al-Qaeda central, which receives funding from private donors, charities and foundations, drug trafficking, and state sponsors of terrorism, among other sources. The other known sources of funding are kidnappings for ransom, donations from individuals, charitable foundations, and religious charities including zakat, occasional state sponsorship, and proceeds from counterfeit currency.³⁶ AQIS also benefits from its strong linkages with groups affiliated with the Pakistan’s intelligence agency—the ISI. In certain instances, Lashkar-e-Taiba funds have made their way to members of AQIS, such as the case with Abdur Rehman who received over $20,000 from LeT in a period of two years.³⁷

In Pakistan, there are discreet cells that specifically cater to raising funds for AQIS. In Karachi, one AQIS cell is dedicated to soliciting donations from businesspersons under the guise of support for Islamic charities. The money then makes its way through various channels throughout Quetta and southern Afghanistan before making its way to AQIS leadership in Waziristan.³⁸

Recruitment:

Before Ayman al-Zawahiri announced AQIS’s formation in September 2014, al-Qaeda looked to recruit jihadists in the disputed territory of Kashmir, a longtime hotbed of foreign jihadist elements. AQIS’s former emir, Asim Umar, reportedly spent years disseminating recruitment videos to Kashmiri Muslims.³⁹ An al-Qaeda video released three months before AQIS’s formation featured Umar, the then-commander of an al-

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS)

Qaeda cell in Pakistan. Umar called on Kashmiri Muslims to wage jihad on India.⁴⁰ An intelligence report alleged in July 2014 that the prophecy of Ghazwa-e-Hind, or the “final battle in India,” was being used by al-Qaeda and the Taliban to drive recruits into Kashmir.⁴¹

Asim Umar reportedly spent years disseminating recruitment videos to Kashmiri Muslims.

Recruiting inside India has historically been difficult for al-Qaeda, as Indian Muslims have not felt the same grievances that may pull others into the organization.⁴² South Asia expert Jason Burke wrote, “Though there are some signs of increasing radicalisation in India, recruitment to extremist networks there is negligible.”⁴³ Amir Rana of the Pakistan Institute for Peace Studies was also skeptical of AQIS’s recruitment strength within India, as well as Burma. Rana told the Los Angeles Times that it will “be very tough for [AQIS] to establish an infrastructure in India. It may be able to establish it in some part of the Indian side of Kashmir. In the past it had failed to attract Rohingya Muslims in Myanmar.”⁴⁴

AQIS’s online propaganda, including videos and PDF magazines, plays a large role in recruiting South Asian Muslims to the jihad on the subcontinent. Al-Qaeda’s As-Sahab media arm has produced videos of speeches appealing to young Muslims in India, specifically in Bihar, Gujarat, Delhi, Uttar Pradesh, and South India.⁴⁵ In the group’s inaugural announcement, Zawahiri specifically referenced the Indian districts of Assam, Gujarat, and Ahmedabad, three areas whose Muslim minorities have experienced or engaged in sectarian unrest in recent years.⁴⁶ This reference may have been intended as a psychological appeal to disaffected Muslim youth within India and across the subcontinent.

AQIS’s online propaganda plays a large role in recruiting South Asian Muslims to terrorism.

Trying to bolster its image and draw new recruits, al-Qaeda released a new English-language magazine, Resurgence, in October 2014. The first issue focused heavily on the brand’s new affiliate. AQIS emir Asim Umar wrote an article deriding the Indian government and its policies towards Muslims. He aimed to appeal to Indian Muslims, writing, “We have little doubt that, sooner or later, the Muslims of India too will come to the realization that their future is inextricably linked to the success of the Afghan Jihad [by the Taliban and al-Qaeda].” In August 2016, AQIS began translating its propaganda into Tamil and Malayam in an attempt to reach South Indian Muslims.⁴⁷

Beyond videos and online magazines, little is known about AQIS’s recruitment tactics. According to a January 2019 report by The Soufan Center, AQIS has relied on using person-to-person contacts for recruitment, training and indoctrination.⁴⁸

Two weeks after the group’s formation in September 2014, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi said that AQIS would struggle to recruit Indian Muslims to its cause. Modi declared, “If anyone thinks Indian Muslims will dance to their tune, they are delusional. Indian Muslims will live for India. They will die for India.”⁴⁹

Training:

Little is known about how AQIS trains its soldiers. In the group’s inaugural video in September 2014, Zawahiri announced the membership of “soldiers of the Islamic Emirate” (meaning the Afghan Taliban) in AQIS.⁵⁰ This may explain the existence of a massive AQIS training facility in Kandahar, Afghanistan.⁵¹ U.S. and Afghan troops raided and demolished the 30-square mile camp in early October 2015.⁵²

In August 2016, AQIS released footage of another training camp in South Waziristan in Pakistan. Militants trained with AK-47s, machine guns, and RPGs at the Qari Imran Camp, named after the founder of AQIS.⁵³ New al-Qaeda recruits progress from basic physical training to weapons training, training in armed assault, and bomb making.⁵⁴ Harakat-ul-Mujahiddeen, a Pakistani Islamist terrorist organization long linked to al-Qaeda and now to AQIS, reportedly operates training camps in Afghanistan.⁵⁵ AQIS emir Asim Umar reportedly trained at one of the camps, which also served to train Kashmiri jihadists.⁵⁶

According to the Soufan Center, AQIS provides a two-week in-person religious training course in the federally administered tribal areas (FATA) that exist along the permeable border of Pakistan and Afghanistan. This training course is meant to further indoctrinate its new recruits. All the members of the AQIS India cell were trained in religious madrassas in the Afghanistan-Pakistan (AFPAK) region.⁵⁷

- August 29, 2022 - August 31, 2022: Indian authorities destroy two madrassas in Assam, northeastern India for allegedly carrying out "jihadi" activities on its premises. One madrassa in Barpeta district was destroyed on August 29, as it was claimed to be used as a training hub by AQIS, and the other in Bongaigaon district was demolished on August 31. A week earlier, a teacher from the Bongaigaon madrassa was arrested on suspicion of links with AQIS. According to police officers, incriminating documents relating to jihadist activity were discovered in the Bongaigaon canteen. - August 18, 2022 - September 6, 2022: Police in West Bengal arrest two suspected members of AQIS in Parganas district. Upon investigation of the suspects homes, officers discover several documents containing highly radicalized thoughts, and statements regarding waging war against India. During the interrogation process, the two men—Raqib Sarkar and Kazi Ahshanullah—reveal that 17 other AQIS members were active in the region. Sarkar is allegedly the "Ansar" or chief coordinator of AQIS's external coordination wing in West Bengal where he coordinated across cells in different states and arranged for safe houses for AQIS leaders visiting West Bengal. - In July, police in Assam, northeastern India, arrest an unreported number of members from Ansarullah Bangla Team (ABT)—an affiliate of AQIS. According to police, the ABT members were the "most technologically advanced terrorist modules busted so far...using a very sophisticated app for encrypted communication." Upon the suspects' arrest, a large amount of information was extracted from the arrested members, including their plans for expansion in India. According to Assam Chief Minister Himanta Biswa Sarma, since April 2020, five ABT sleeper cells and 30 members have been busted in Assam. - July 11, 2021: Police in Uttar Pradesh, India, arrest two suspected AQIS members. Reportedly, the suspects—who were among three key members of the AQIS cell in the Uttar Pradesh—sought to carry out serial blasts and long-wolf suicide bombings in the state. Source: "Uttar Pradesh ATS arrests two suspected Al Qaeda terrorists, claims major terror plot foiled," New Indian Express, July 11, 2021, <https://www.newindianexpress.com/nation/2021/jul/11/two-terrorist-of-al-qaeda-supported-outfit-arrested-from-lucknow-2328674.html>.
- July 23, 2020: The U.N. Security Council releases a report that claims around 150 to 200 AQIS members from Bangladesh, India, Myanmar, and Pakistan are operating under the Taliban in the Nimruz, Helmand, and Kandahar provinces in Afghanistan. According to the report, AQIS is allegedly planning retaliatory operations to avenge the death of its former leader, Asim Umar. Source: "Letter dated 16 July 2020 from the Chair of the Security Council Committee pursuant to resolutions 1267 (1999), 1989 (2011) and 2253 (2015) concerning Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (Da'esh), Al-Qaida and associated individuals, groups, undertakings and entities addressed to the President of the Security Council," United Nations Security Council, July 23, 2020, https://www.securitycouncilreport.org/atf/cf/%7B65BFCF9B-6D27-4E9C-8CD3-CF6E4FF96FF9%7D/s_2020_717.pdf.

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS)

Violent history:

Since its founding, AQIS has focused primarily on executing lone-wolf style attacks, targeting secular and atheist activists and intellectuals based in Bangladesh. In 2016, groups and individuals affiliated with AQIS began calling for lone-wolf attacks on U.S. interests, issuing a target list of specific U.S. politicians and calling for attacks on U.S. universities involved in designing drones.⁶⁴ In June 2017, AQIS also called for attacks against U.S. interests and personnel based in Afghanistan.⁶⁵

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS)

Designations:

Designations by the U.S. Government:

- June 30, 2016: The U.S. Department of State designated AQIS as a Foreign Terrorist Organization under Section 219 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, as well as a Specially Designated Global Terrorist (SDGT) under Executive Order 13224.⁸³

Designations by Foreign Governments and Organizations:

- November 28, 2016: Australia designated AQUIS as a terrorist organization.⁸⁴

Al-Qaeda in the Indian Subcontinent (AQIS)

Associations:

Ties to Extremist Entities:

- Taliban

AQIS's emir, Asim Umar, had reported directly to Taliban leader Mullah Mohammad Omar before the latter's death. As a former commander in the Pakistani Taliban, Umar's appointment as emir of AQIS reveals the ties between the Taliban and the new al-Qaeda affiliate. In its "Code of Conduct" published in June 2017, AQIS reiterated its allegiance to the emir of the Taliban and declared that its members fight "shoulder-to-shoulder" with the Taliban—and sometimes under its banner—in the Afghan insurgency. It also revealed that AQIS is so closely integrated with the Taliban that some AQIS members are part of the Taliban's chain-of-command.⁸⁵

Al-Qaeda Central and the Taliban have close ties. Al-Qaeda emir Ayman al-Zawahiri has repeatedly renewed his oath, or pledge of allegiance, to the leader of the Taliban, formerly Omar.⁸⁶ Since May 2015, the Taliban has been led by Mullah Haibatullah Akhundzada.⁸⁷

- Ansarullah Bangla Team

The Ansarullah Bangla Team (ABT), commonly known as the Ansar Bangla, is an Islamist group based in Bangladesh. It was formed in 2007 and banned by the Bangladeshi government on May 25, 2015.⁸⁸ Nonetheless, it is believed to continue working closely with AQIS, and has been blamed for numerous murders of secular bloggers for which AQIS has taken responsibility.⁸⁹

Since its ban in 2015, a number of ABT members have been arrested on murder-related charges. ABT cleric Jashimuddin Rahmani was one of seven defendants found guilty in December 2015 of the murder of blogger Ahmed Rajib Haider. Accused ABT members have also been arrested for links to the murder of liberal blogger Niloy Neel. At least one ABT member was reportedly arrested on undisclosed charges after carrying out pro-ISIS recruitment in the country.⁹⁰

- Harakat-ul-Mujahideen

Harakat-ul-Mujahideen, a Pakistani Islamist terrorist organization long linked to al-Qaeda and now to AQIS, reportedly operates training camps in Afghanistan.⁹¹ AQIS emir Asim Umar reportedly trained at one of the group's camps, which also trains Kashmiri jihadists.⁹²

- Ansar Ghazwat ul Hind

Ansar Ghazwat ul Hind (AGH) is a Kashmiri jihadist group founded in July 2017 after its leader, Zakir Musa, broke away from Kashmiri separatist group Hizbul Mujahideen. Musa declared his allegiance to al-Qaeda in 2017, and disseminated rhetoric that was consistent with the agendas of both AQIS and al-Qaeda Central.⁹³ Furthermore, Taliban commander Haji Mansoor Mehsod praised the establishment of Ansar Ghazwat ul Hind and credited the "hard work" of AQIS for making it possible.⁹⁴ Following Musa's capture and eventual execution by Indian forces in 2019, Hameed Lelhari was declared the new chief of AGH.⁹⁵ Although the Kashmiri insurgent group benefits from the support of Pakistan, al-Qaeda has been in conflict with Pakistani-backed insurgencies and has amplified the presence of AGH as a way to create an independent jihadist presence in Jammu and Kashmir that is not accountable to Pakistan and its interests.⁹⁶

Rhetoric:

Group Message, July 12, 2016

“What stops you from using a dagger or knife to slit the throats of forces of Kufr? Remember, that the glory you seek demands nothing less than blood and nothing more than initiative and unwavering belief in the path of Allah – Jihad Fi’sabillilah.”⁹⁷

Group Message July 12, 2016

“Attack the forts of the enemies. Petrol bombs are one of the best ways to soften up the enemies and then attack them with knives and iron rods. Use wet face covers to lessen the impact of tear gas.”

Group Message, July 12, 2016

“Attack the forts of the enemies. Petrol bombs are one of the best ways to soften up the enemies and then attack them with knives and iron rods. Use wet face covers to lessen the impact of tear gas.”⁹⁸

Ayman al-Zawahiri, Al-Qaeda emir, September 3, 2014

In a video release announcing the formation of AQIS:

“It is an entity that was formed to promulgate the call of the reviving imam Sheikh Usama bin Laden, may Allah have mercy on him, to call the Ummah to unite round the word of Tawhid [monotheism], to wage jihad against its enemies, to liberate its land, to restore its sovereignty, and to revive its Caliphate.”⁹⁹

Asim Omar, October 2014

In al-Qaeda’s Resurgence magazine:

“We have little doubt that, sooner or later, the Muslims of India too will come to the realization that their future is inextricably linked to the success of the Afghan Jihad [Taliban and al-Qaeda].”¹⁰⁰
